Five Key talking points

1. Planned Work Requires Planned Parts.

- ⚙ Maintenance strategies are only as good as the supply chain's ability to deliver the right parts, tools, and services at the right time. Without tight integration, schedule compliance and wrench time suffer.

2. Unplanned Work Creates Chaos—Unless Supply Is Agile

- ⚙ Emergency repairs demand rapid procurement and redeployment. Only a connected supply chain can support resilience in crisis without driving up costs through overstocking or premiums.

3. Asset Strategies Drive Demand Signals

- ⚙ Accurate asset lifecycle planning and failure forecasting allow supply chain teams to reduce inventory bloat, optimize reorder points (ROP), reorder quantities (ROQ), and improve procurement lead times.

4. Critical Spares = Critical Risks

- ⚙ EAMs define asset criticality; supply chain ensures availability. Together, they manage risk by determining what's truly “critical” and aligning stocking, sourcing, and vendor strategies accordingly.

5. Shared Data Enables Shared Success

- ⚙ BOMs, failure modes, lead times, and usage rates all live in different systems. Only when EAM and Supply Chain teams collaborate on master data, governance, and analytics can the enterprise achieve true reliability and cost control.
